

Resume
Susan M. Cloke

Susan Cloke is the principal at Stonebridge, a land use, design and development company. Ms. Cloke brings more than twenty years of public policy and development experience to her work. The positions she has held in both the public and private sectors qualify her to understand the many and often competing goals of all the parties involved in any land use decision. She brings the skills and knowledge learned in her study of architecture and urban planning, her record in both the public and private sectors and her understanding of the political process to her work.

Principal, Stonebridge (1993- present)

Represent private and public clients on land use issues; including representation before administrative bodies and negotiations with relevant City and County departments and agencies. Facilitate communications, lead negotiations and mediate conflicts with appropriate neighborhood individuals and organizations. Organize teams for development projects; identify and work with technical experts, including but not limited to: architects, landscape architects, historic preservationists, environmental consultants, structural engineers, geologists, traffic engineers and archaeologists. Advise clients on public policy, environmental issues, land use planning and urban design issues.
